A New York correspondent writes as follows: Rounding the Fifth Avenue Hotel corner a few days ago, I met, just at the Broad-way crossing of Fifth avenue, the tall, handsome and stately widow of John J. Crittenden. She was looking in splendid health, was magnificently dressed, and attracted the attention of many who did not know her by personal appearance. Mrs. Crittenden is still a well preserved woman. She had hardly disappeared down Broadway before I was surprised to see another distinguished lady pass in the opposite direction, ved, nor so young, but still a noticeate She was once the wife of Daniel Webster. As this lady went up Fifth avenue, a no less distinguished lady passed down the street in her carriage-Mrs. General Philip Kearney that was, a magnificent woman in respect to appearance, with much natural beauty and a good deal more that was artificial. General Kearney, it will be remembered, left two widows-each of whom was designated in his will as his wife, This was his second wife, formerly a Miss Maxwell, daughter of a former collector of this port, and a distinguished merchant, The first Mrs. Kear-ney was Miss Diana Cuthbert Bullitt, of Louisville, Ky., sister of the present collector of the port of New Orleans, and an estimable lady. While she was still living. Kearney saw and admired Miss Maxwell and she admired bim. The two went to Europe together and, after being gone about a year, during which a suit for divorce from the first Mrs. Kearney was prosecuted and obtained by some means, returned and were married. When Kearney was killed, his estate was left to his second wife, with a provision of $80,000 to Mrs. Kearney nee Builitt, and the same sum to each of her children. Mrs. Kearney nee Maxwell is living in fine style. She is said to be very charitable, and take great interest in the welfare of soldiers and their families.
